London (sometimes referred to as Greater London) is the capital and the largest city in the United Kingdom. Located in the southeast of England, it is considered one of the most multicultural cities in the world, being home to speakers of over 300 languages. Many also know it as an important financial, cultural, and economic leader, but here are a few things you may not know:

- London started as a Roman city and its original area is known as the City of London. The City of London is located in the center of what we all know of as London. - In 2011, nearly three million—or about 37%—of London’s residents were foreign-born, meaning they were born in another country. This makes London the city with the second highest number of immigrants, behind New York City.
- In 2014, over 16 million international tourists visited London. This is more than any other European city including Paris.
