Welcome to ReadySetGoal, my new blog about how to achieve your life's goals. For my first blog post, I asked several high school students to describe their plans after they graduate. Ben Simmons is a senior in high school, and wants to open a restaurant someday. Here is what Ben wrote about achieving his goal:

Most of my friends are going to college as soon as they graduate from high school, but I want to follow a different path. When I graduate, I'm going to follow my dream of opening a restaurant. My parents used to take me out to eat a lot when I was a child. Those are happy memories, and I always knew I wanted to open a restaurant. My parents helped me make an action plan. I got a job at Bellini's Restaurant last year. I'm a waiter now. After I learn everything about serving food to customers, I'll learn how to cook. While I'm learning how to cook, I'll take business classes so I can learn how to manage a restaurant. When I finish taking business classes, I'll become the manager at Bellini's. I'll work until I save some money, and as soon as I save enough, I'll open my own restaurant. Before I decide on the final menu, I'll travel to Italy and eat at the best restaurants so I can learn about traditional Italian food. If everything goes well, I'll achieve my goal of opening a restaurant before I turn 25.
