James and Michelle have been hired to plan an anniversary party for Madeleine's company which was established fifty years ago. Employees from the London and Paris offices are all invited. There are sixty British employees and eighty French employees, so James and Michelle have been very busy making arrangements. The celebration will be in Paris, and Michelle has already decided the location and menu because she speaks fluent French. She also has already emailed invitations to all the guests, but she hasn't prepared decorations, yet. James and Michelle ordered special party gifts from a company in Korea three weeks ago, but they still haven't been delivered. They're worried they won't arrive in time, so Michelle and James have discussed ordering gifts from another shop in France.
