Tips for a Job Interview—The Interview Expert

With the increase of highly educated candidates in the job market and the decrease of high-paying, entry-level jobs, the competition for job openings has intensified. So here are a few tips that you should consider for your next job interview in order to improve your chances for getting that ideal starting position.

- 1) Dress properly. People always ask me what they should wear to a job interview. It's simple: dress appropriately and be comfortable. "Appropriate" means different things for different industries; for a job at a law firm, both men and women will want to wear a suit, but at a design firm, a suit can be out of place. Research dress codes in the industry and pick out something to wear accordingly. And remember: You want your answers to the interviewer's questions to be more memorable than what you wear, so don't overdo it.
- 2) Prepare for the easy questions. I once asked a 20-something candidate why he had applied for the position we were interviewing him for, and he seemed confused. After a few seconds of umms and ahhs, he finally spit out a response. But his reason was so far off that I could tell that he hadn't researched the company or the position much. Needless to say, I didn't ask him if he wanted a second interview. Research the job and the company and prepare for the easy questions. Employers want people who are prepared, and they really like people who are prepared and are excited about working at their company, so remember to do your research.
- 3) Ask questions. After most interviews, interviewers ask candidates if they have any questions. Usually by this time, the candidates are so exhausted from answering questions that they forget to ask the good ones. This is the perfect opportunity to again show how much you prepared. Ask questions related to the company, department, or position you are applying to. Ask about the company's position in the market and where they see opportunities for growth in the industry. But definitely don't ask how much the salary is or how much vacation time you get—these indicate that you are more interested in how the company will benefit you and not how you will benefit the company. Be sure to focus on what you can do for them.

SPEAKING*PART 5

Look at the prompts below. Report the questions in those prompts as indirect questions.

- Where do you live?
- How did you hear about this job?
- Do you prefer to work in teams or alone?
- When did you graduate college?
- Who is the most influential person in your life?
- Can you start working here immediately?
- How much do you expect your salary to be?

WRITING*PART 6

Imagine that you had an interview for a job at a bank yesterday. The interviewer asked you the following questions:

- How did you find out about the job?
- Why do you want to work here?
- Do you have any experience working at a bank?
- Where do you see yourself in five years?
- What are your strengths and weakness?
- Are you available to travel for the job?

Write a short email to a friend telling him/her about the interviewer's questions and your responses to the questions. Use indirect questions and answers in your email.
