READING

PART 4

Read the email. Then choose the correct answers.

Dear Michael,

Sorry it's taken me so long to write to you. I should have gotten to writing to you weeks ago, but I've been so busy since coming here to California. I'm really looking forward to seeing all you guys again during summer break. School has been challenging, but it's also really interesting. I'm sure I should be studying even more than I have been. Part of the problem is that I'm taking too many classes. You're only supposed to take four classes per term, but I'm taking six now.

Anyway, I've gotten to know a lot of new people. I have this one really good friend, a girl named Cecilia who introduced me to a group of other students. I met her in one of my linguistics classes. I invited everyone over to my new apartment last week. Everyone arrived on time, which is different from what I'm used to. We had an international potluck, so everyone brought food from different countries. I made some dishes from back home, Cecilia brought American food, Emma brought food from Spain, Rodrigo brought Brazilian food, Teru brought Japanese food, and Albert brought some Korean food. Everybody enjoyed the food and I tried many things I hadn't had before.

Later they gave me some housewarming presents for my new apartment. I was about to put them away, but Cecilia asked if I was going to open them. Apparently in America, you are supposed to open gifts right when you get them. I got some great gifts like houseplants and things for the kitchen, but I received some unusual gifts like a clock from Cecilia. She said she got it for me because she always has to have a clock in her home. Although I'm not really sure why, my parents have always told me to never give a clock to anyone as a gift, so I have never received one as a gift before. Another gift that I thought was odd was a gift from my friend Emma. She gave me four scented candles. They smell very nice and are lovely, but as you know, the number of candles she gave me is associated with the word "death." I'm sure she didn't mean anything by it, but it definitely caught me by surprise! I guess I should try to be open-minded because I'm in a different country now.

Besides the strange gifts, the party was so much fun! I thought I knew all about American culture, but I'm still not accustomed to the customs of gift-giving in this country. The weather is kind of chilly now. How are things with you? How are things back home? Nice and warm, I bet. I'll bring you something special from America when I come home for break. Well, Michael, I'll write soon!

Love,

Anna

SPEAKINGPART 6

Read the conversation between Albert and Jackie. Then respond to Albert's questions at the end. Remember to use modals of necessity, advice and / or expectations.

Albert: That trip was the worst trip I have ever had in my life!

Jackie: Yeah! I can't believe how bad it was!

Albert: We got to the airport early, but we missed our flight because airport security took so long! And it cost so much money to take a taxi to our hotel!

Jackie: Not only that, but it was so cold there! We spent so much time on the first day looking for warm clothes to wear.

Albert: Yes! To make things worse, we couldn't find any popular American fast food restaurants there, so we tried the local food, but it tasted so odd!

Jackie: And nobody spoke English! People kept giving us strange looks when we asked them if they could speak English!

Albert: Do you think there's anything we could have done to have had a better trip?
